

The Golden Grains

In a quiet field near an old barn, lived two crows named Cora and Carl. They were clever, curious, and always together.

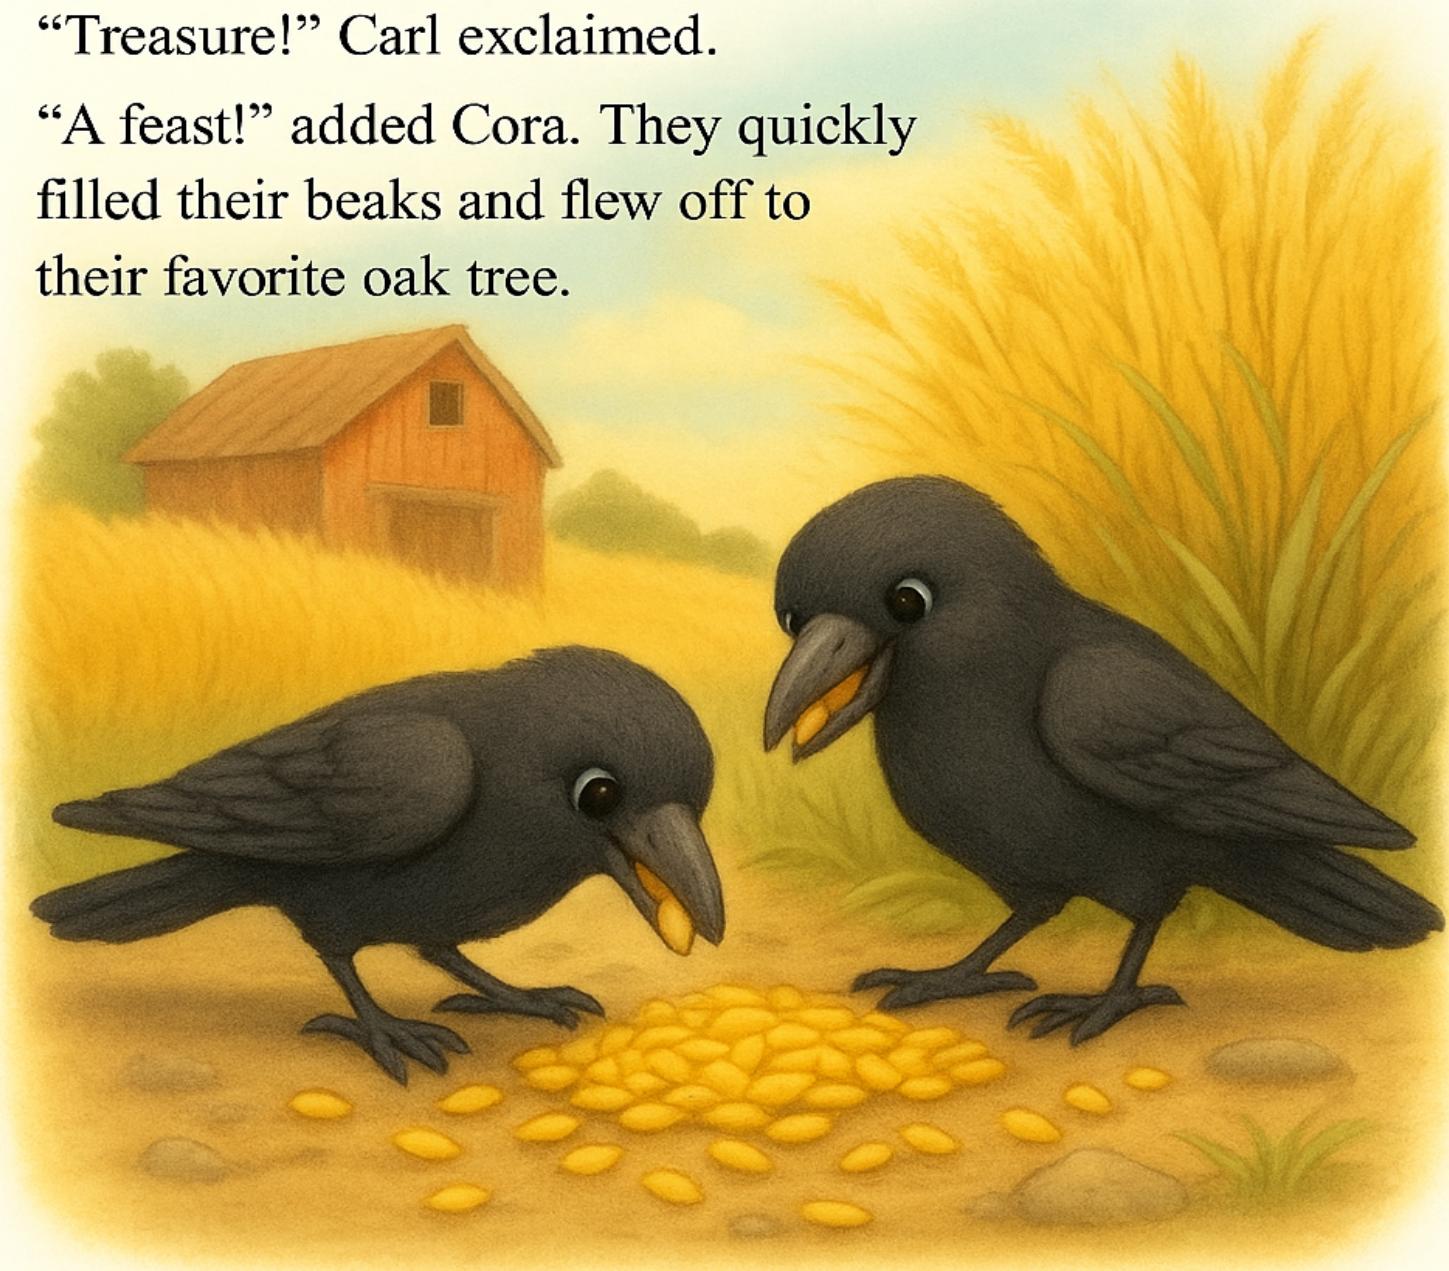

One day, while soaring above the golden wheat fields, Cora spotted something shiny below.

“Carl, look!” she cawed.

Down they swooped and found a pile of golden wheat grains, spilled from a farmer’s sack.

“Treasure!” Carl exclaimed.

“A feast!” added Cora. They quickly filled their beaks and flew off to their favorite oak tree.

Sharing and Storing

Under the shady branches of the oak, Cora and Carl placed their grains in a small hollow.

“We must save some for winter,” said Cora wisely.

“And share with the sparrows too,” added Carl.

Day after day, they returned to the field, gathering more grains.

The hollow filled up, and soon it sparkled with golden wheat.

Other birds gathered around, chirping with joy.

Cora and Carl were happy to share their find.
